D RIG

An out and out pop-up rig, the D rig has been out for donkey's and is still widely used today by old-school anglers. The D sits stiff on a length of fluorocarbon meaning that it's virtually invisible and tricky to eject. Give it a try!

1. A hook with an out-turned eye and fluorocarbon are essential for tying the D rig.

2. Remove some of the IQ Original Fluorocarbon. Around 12 inches is suffice.

3. Push the tag end through the eye of a Choddy hook, like so.

4. Begin to whip the Choddy hook on using a knotless knot.

5. Once you have whipped down five times, take it back through the front of the eye.

6. Thread a Micro Rig Ring onto the tag end that would normally be a hair.

7. Then, place the tag back through the eye of the hook, as shown here.

8. Carefully burn the tag end with a naked flame. This creates a blob.

9. The blob prevents the tag end from pulling back through the eye.

10. Attach a ring swivel by forming a figure-of-eight loop in the opposing end.

11. Moisten the knot and then slowly pull it tight, like so.

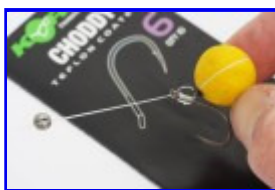

12. Trim the tag end with a sharp pair of Korda Razorblades.

13. Anchor your pop-up down with the correct split shot. This is a No1 shot.

14. Pineapple pop-ups are a fantastic bait for outwitting opportunist carp.

15. Tie the pop-up onto some dental floss and then attach to the Micro Rig Ring.

16. The final rig is very invisible and carp find it tricky to get rid of - superb!
